Get a sneak peek at my writing graphic organizers, rubrics, and handouts! This FREEBIE includes sample resources to keep you and your students organized while writing paragraphs, essays, or research projects. Perfect for opinion, informative, and research writing. The Persuasion Map is an interactive tool that helps students plan their persuasive essay or debate by mapping out arguments, identifying reasons, and providing examples. Students can move around the map freely, then save, email, or print it. I also offer three versions of the Hamburger Paragraph Writing organizer for 2nd-3rd graders: one with lines, one without, and a full-color version. Each has space to write topic sentences, details, and closing sentences. For older students (3rd-6th grades), I provide persuasive writing graphic organizers with boxes for opinion, reasons, counterarguments, and more. Additionally, there are three webs to help students plan their writing: * A circle-and-circles web for main ideas and supporting details * A six-section web for organizing main topics and details * A nine-section web for in-depth topic development and detail planning On our website, students in grades 2-4 will explore a topic and record their observations using their 5 senses - sight, sound, smell, touch, and taste. For this activity, there's no need for lines on the t-chart; instead, use these persuasive writing graphic organizers to help your students plan and organize their thoughts. These free resources from The Curriculum Corner offer eight printable pages that can aid in lesson planning and student writing. The graphic organizers are designed to facilitate thought organization and research-based writing. By starting with one of these pages, students will find the writing process less daunting. You can choose an organizer that matches the writing task or let students pick the one that suits them best. This variety of options allows you to adapt instruction to individual student needs. This collection of eight graphic organizers includes spaces for identifying topics and opinions, as well as planning and outlining. Some pages prompt students to share their reasons for holding a particular opinion, while others encourage citing evidence to support those opinions. You can also use one organizer per paragraph when creating longer research pieces. Additionally, consider adding conclusion organizers to student planning.
